More More info.The effects of almitrine bismesylate on peripheral blood immune cell function. The major aim of the study was to assess the effects of almitrine bismesylate (AB) on peripheral blood mononuclear cell (PBMC) function. The immune status of 18-29 year old males with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) was assessed before and after 10 days' treatment with AB using seven in vitro tests of PBMC function. Tests of cell number, lymphocyte subset phenotype and superoxide generation were unaffected by treatment. Significant increases were seen in the ability of PBMC to proliferate in response to soluble mitogens and allogeneic cells. In addition, the ability of PBMC to form conjugates with erythrocytes was significantly increased after AB treatment. To assess the effect of treatment on the function of T cells in COPD, the ability of PBMC to respond to mitogens with the production of interleukin (IL)-2, IL-4 and interferon gamma (IFN-gamma) was measured. Significant increases were seen in the ability of PBMC to respond to various mitogens with production of IL-2 and IFN-gamma, whereas PBMC from AB-treated subjects produced less IL-4. The results indicate that AB exerts marked immunostimulatory effects on mitogen-induced proliferation and cell conjugate formation, in addition to a selective effect on the Th1/Th2 balance of lymphocyte function.Q: Where to take advantage of Python multiprocessing / threading? While reviewing some code that has a handful of threads, I've noticed that a lot of it is just invoking the same function but with different parameters. For example: class MyClass(object): ... def some_function(self, arg1, arg2, arg3): ... while True: ... self.some_function(param1, param2, param3) # WHERE DOES THE CODE GO? Where is the code that actually does something reasonable with those three arguments? Surely it's all happening
