A simple, sensitive enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) for detection of anti-glycoprotein IIb/IIIa (GP IIb/IIIa) receptor antibody was established and used for measurement of circulating anti-GP IIb/IIIa receptor antibody in patients with suspected and known acquired thrombocytopenia. In addition, a platelet glycoprotein (GP) Ib/IX receptor activation assay was developed to detect circulating anti-GPIb/IX antibodies, as it is difficult to detect anti-GP Ib/IX receptor antibodies by using conventional coagulation tests, such as the activated partial thromboplastin time (APTT). Anti-GP IIb/IIIa receptor antibody was detected in a patient with thrombocytopenia that was suspected to be due to immune thrombocytopenia, and that was associated with increased platelet activation at the platelet surface. Anti-GPIb/IX antibody was detected in all of the patients with immune thrombocytopenia, but none of the patients with chronic immune thrombocytopenia or post-transfusion purpura with acute bleeding. These results show that the ELISA and platelet GP Ib/IX receptor activation assay could be useful for diagnosis of immune thrombocytopenia.
